For the Alexandria Advertiser.

Serious evils arise from the erroneous calculations of mankind: by them the too sanguine merchant is often ruined, and the wretched gamester brought to the acme of desperation. But these ills are not to be compared to the soul-destroying mischiefs which result from miscalculating our time in this world, and which produces that lassitude and inanity, with regard to futurity, which are but too apparent amongst the far greater part of mankind. Pecuniary considerations are as light as air, when set in competition with the concerns of eternity.

" Let time appear a moment, as it is,
" And let eternity's full orb at once,
" Turn on my soul, and strike it into
" heav'n—
" How must a spirit, late escap'd from
" earth,
" The truth of things new-blazing in its
" eye,
" Look back, astonish'd on the ways of
" men,
" Whose lives' whole drift is to forget their
" graves!"

In the fleeting things of time less to one proves gain to another. Thus while the merchant, by the quarrels of the old world, and the English and French shooting each other, is encreasing his wealth; the banker, who discounts 100,000 dolls. per week, at 6 per cent. of the merchants' paper by taking the 100th part of the sum for 60 days discount, gains by miscalculation, upwards of 4000 dolls. per annum, to which the laws of his country give him no right: and the lucky gamester pockets his unfortunate opponents money without remorse, with this salvo for his conscience, that the same would be done to him, if placed by chance in the power of his adversary.

I have been lead into the preceding and subsequent reflections from reading De Moivre and Prices's treatises on chances and life annuities—Pretty books! the rigid Christian will exclaim, for a Sunday evening's exercise—but from these various facts appear which ought to stimulate us to a full sense of our duty and a proper application of our time.

In the city of London one half, and in the large towns of America one third of the children die under three years of age, and in some places a larger proportion.

According to Kerseboom's Table of Observations, but a fourteenth part of all that are born live to 80.

In the large towns of Europe, it has been pretty accurately ascertained, that about a 25th part of all the inhabitants above 15 die every year.

The probability that a person aged 35 shall attain to 50 is as 17 to 7. The probability a person of this age shall attain to 60, or live 25 years, is nearly an even chance.

Out of 200 persons, all 40 years of age about 5 may be expected to die in a year.

A marriage between two persons, both 25, will not probably last longer than 17 years; nor a marriage between two persons both 30, longer than 16 years—such marriages it is true may last possibly 30 or 40 years; but this circumstance is more than balanced by the fact that no less possible, they may not last one year.

The odds that the woman shall survive in marriage and not the man, is not less than 3 to 2.

The age of 86 may be considered as the utmost probable extent of human life: But the days of such men, says Solomon, are full of trouble.

Say ye who know the ills which wait,
Attendant on this fleeting state,
When o'er the teeming dewy meed
The nibbling cattle, well pleased, feed,
When od'rous flow'rs their fragrance fling,
When pinion'd tribes enraptured sing,
When silkly soft the zyphers blow,
Can man, poor man! feel poignant woe?
Yes, truly, at this very hour,
Beneath disease's baneful pow'r,
Undeceiv'd by pleasure's bait,
Thousands mourn their hapless state.
But know this pious truth, O man!
Whose life is grief, whose age, a span,
When trouble makes frail nature groan,
The soul's true value best is known.
Now flutt'ring in the prime of May,
The gay coquettes their charms display;
Of silky mien, and regal gait,
Great Madam slowly steps in state;
And Master struts with little Miss;
All cheer'd by some ideal bliss:
But happiest of the happy train,
Are they who taught, in school of pain
In early life, to view serene,
The phantoms of this fleeting scene;
Whether pain or pleasure sway
The sceptre of the short liv'd day.
Look around and view the Bee
Humming o'er the daisied lee,
And sucking sweetness from each flow'r,
To fill her luscious waxen bow'r,
Ere the pink its fragrance sheeds,
Or the jacinths hang their heads:
Then, O man! improve the day,
While youth and vigour bear the sway,
Ere the sharp autumnal air
Jovial summer's sweets impair.

Cure for the Bite of a Mad Dog.

At this season of the year, and more particularly during the present drought, it may be expected that the canine species will be very subject to the hydrophobia.

The following receipt has been found in Europe, an antidote to this dreadful poison. It is given on the authority of Sir George Cobb, who brought it from Tonquin, and is reported, in most cases, to be infallible.

" Take twenty four grains of native cinnabar, the like quantity of factitious cinnabar, and fifteen grains of musk.—Grind these together into a very fine powder, and put it into a small tea cup of arrack, rum or brandy: let it be well mixed, and give it to the person bit, as soon as possible—a second dose of the same must be repeated thirty days afterwards, and a third may be taken in thirty days more. But if symptoms of madness appear, they must take one of the above doses immediately, and a second in an hour after; and if wanted, a third must be given a few hours afterwards. The above receipt is calculated, for a full grown person, to children smaller doses, in proportion to their ages. This medicine has been given to hundreds with success. If, in the madness, they cannot take it in liquid, make it up into a bolus with honey: after the first two doses, let it be repeated every three or four hours, till the patient be recovered."

TO INFIDELS.

That infidelity and scepticism are perfectly harmless, and that infidels and sceptics are inoffensive men, has been frequently, and, I think, very rashly asserted. I think the reasonings of Beattie on this subject are conclusive, and sufficient to convince any reasonable man, that " Atheism and Deism are not perfectly neutral." Will you give the following extract from the writings of that judicious author a place in your paper. B.

EXTRACT.

" Though he (the sceptic) were to content himself with urging objections, without seeking to lay down any principles of his own, which, however, is a degree of moderation that no sceptic ever yet arrived at, we would not on that account pronounce him an inoffensive man. If his objections have ever weakened the moral or religious belief of any one person, he has injured that person in his dearest and most important concerns. They who know the value of true religion, and have had any opportunity of observing its effects on themselves or others, need not be told, how dreadful to a sensible mind it is to be staggered in its faith by the cavils of the infidel. Every person of common humanity, who knows any thing of the heart of man, would shudder at the thought of infusing scepticism into the pious Christian. Suppose the Christian to retain his faith in spite of all objections; yet the confutation of these cannot fail to distress him; and a habit of doubting once begun, may to the latest hour of life prove fatal to his peace of mind. Let no one mistake or misrepresent me; I am not speaking of those points of doctrine which rational believers allow to be indifferent: I speak of those great and most essential articles of faith; the existence of a Deity, infinitely wise, beneficient and powerful; the certainty of a future state of retribution; and the divine authority of the gospel.—These are the articles which some late authors labour with all their might to overturn; and these are the articles which every person who loves virtue and mankind would wish to see ardently and zealously defended. It is bigotry; I would not part with it for a thousand words; I congratulate the man who is possessed of it; for, amidst all the vicissitudes and calamities of the present state, that man enjoys an inexhaustible fund of consolation, of which it is not in the power of fortune to deprive him. Calamities did I say?—The evils of a very short life will not be accounted such by him who has a near and certain prospect of a happy eternity. Will it be said, that the firm belief of these divine truths did ever give rise to ill nature or persecution? It will not be said by any person who is at all acquainted with history, or the human mind. Of such belief, when sincere and undebased by criminal passions, meekness, benevolence, and forgiveness, are the natural and necessary effects. There is not a book on earth so favorable to all the kind, and all the sublime affections, or so unfriendly to hatred and persecution, to tyranny, injustice, and every sort of malevolence, as that very gospel against which our sceptics entertain such a rancorous antipathy. Of this they cannot be ignorant, if they have ever read it; for it breaths nothing throughout but mercy, benevolence and peace. If they have not read it, they and their prejudices are as far below our contempt, as any thing so hateful can be: if they have, their pretended concern for the rights of mankind is all hypocrisy and a lie. Nor need they attempt to frame an answer to this acquasation, till they have proved, that the morality of the gospel is faulty or imperfect; that virtue is not useful to individuals, nor benificial to society; that the evils of life are most effectually alleviated is a much more encouraging prospect to virtue, than the certain view of eternal happiness; that nothing is a greater check to vice, than a firm persuasion that no punishment awaits it; and that it is a consideration full of misery to a good man, when weeping on the grave of a beloved friend, to reflect that they shall soon meet again in a better state, never to part any more. Till the teacher of infidelity have proved these points, or renounced their pretentions to universal patriotism, their character is polluted with all the infamy that can be implied in the appellation of liar and hypocrite."

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.

London and Liverpool papers to the 18th of July, were received at the office of the Daily Advertiser last evening, 6 days later than our last advices, by the ship Merchant, capt. Lord, in 42 days from Liverpool: The following is the most important intelligence they contain.

REBELLION IN IRELAND.

LIVERPOOL, July 28.

Copy of a letter from Diblin dated Sunday, 11 o'clock, 24th current.

To a Merchant in this town.

" Dear Sir,

" You will be shocked to hear that we are at this moment in a more alarming situation than at any period during the unfortunate rebellion: At an early hour yesterday evening, a variety of inflammatory proclamations were distributed in every part of the town, calling on people to unite as before, in opposition to English oppression, &c. and at so earlier an hour as eight o'clock, a large party forced into the Lord Mayor's, and seized all the arms and pikes which were in the house, and about 10 o'clock a general engagement took place in the neighbourhood of James street, Thomas street and every part of the liberty. Lord Kilwarden (the Chief Justice of the King's Bench) coming into town about 9 o'clock was forced out of his carriage in James street, with his nephew and were both killed by pikes.

" Col. Brown of the 21st, and a few more officers, and several of the soldiery and yeomen have unfortunately been killed, together with a great number who appear of the very lowest order. But what is the most alarming, is that their plots have been carried on with such secrecy that they are not yet discovered, notwithstanding several prisoners were taken. Mr. Clark, of Palmeston, cotton manufacturer, was shot on Arran Quay, at 8 o'clock in the evening: and it appears there were several parties collecting in different parts of the town at a very early hour. They Privy Council has been sitting at the castle these two hours past and it is expected martial law will be proclaimed immediately. There are several gallows's erected in different parts of the town, and the executions it is supposed will be innumerable, as there are about 100 prisoners taken. They do not seem to have any leaders of consequence; the only one taken is a man of the name of M'Cabe, a publican, at whose house there has been got abont 1000 pikes and 600

rounds of ball cartrige. W

"The situation of the city is most awful. The drums beat to arms at ten o'clock at night and continued until 12, when almost every citizen was under arms. The engagement continued until 4 o'clock and within these two hours two of the 62d regiment have been killed in the neigbourhood of the Royal Hospital."

From the Hibernian Journal, dated Monday, July 25.

On Saturday evening last, government having had intimation that a depot of pikes and other engines of destruction, had been made by a newly organized horde of insurgents in the vicinity of Bridgefoot street, a detachment of cavalry had been ordered by gen. Dunn from the barracks, which were joined by a company of yeomen infantry, part of the Liberty Rangers, now under the command of the Earl of Meath, having arrived at the spot where their instructions directed them, after a skirmish of a few minutes with the populace, in which a few lives wee lost, a great number of pikes were found, also several combustibles, parcels of nals, fragments of iron, glass compost clay, oakum and other materials.

With these were discovered a number of deal lark, in pieces of various lengths, from 7 to 15 feet in length, with a circular cavity in each of about three inches diameter, filled with gunpowder, to each aperture was applied a wooden plug, with a handle and vent hole, or receptacle for a fuze appeared on the upper surface of the timber about the middle: This machine was supposed to have been intended to aid the projected operations of setting fire to Dublin Barracks, Several kegs of powder were discovered, with parcels made of four musket balls in each, and a tin tube of about two inches long, through which fire was designed to have been communicated to whatever vehicle was constructed to discharge them.

A suit of green uniform, with gold apaulets and a splendid embroidery was also found, and several papers, by which the train of operations fixed by those deluded people, was discovered and will doubtless be prevented. Among the melancholy disasters of the night might be reckoned the murder of Lord Kilwarden, chief Justice of the court of King's Bench, and the Rev. Arthur Wolfe, his nephew, who accompanied him with the ladies of his lordship's family, in a carriage to town. The wound he received was a large lacerated one in the side, having the appearance of being inflicted by a shot from a blunderbuss.

A privy council have been sitting yesterday at the Castle, and did not break up until a late hour last night: a proclamation, offering a reward of 1000l. for the discovery of the murderers of Lord Kilwarden, and the Rev. Arthur Wolfe, had been issued, upwards of one hundred prisoners had been lodged yesterday in the new Prevot in the barracks. A printed notice from the lord Mayor and board of magistrates was yesterday handed about, apprizing the citizens of Dublin, that from the recent disturbances, they feel it incumbent on them to reinforce the insurrection Act pursuant to which it became penal during the last rebellion, for any citizen not on military duty, to be out later than eight o'clock in the evening.

The following is a copy of the letter which Mr. Forbes, consul of the United States in Hamburg, sent to the captains of his nation:

Hamburg July 11.

"SIR,

"The blockade of the Elbe by the English, has been officially announced to the government of this city. In so serious a crisis as the present, it is of consequence to the interest of our owners most strictly to observe, not only the laws as they have been acknowledged by their respective nations, but also those laws as they have been laid down by the principal maritime powers. I therefore advise you not to take any more goods on board; to procure the best certificates, that what you have already loaded has been shipped and loaded before the blockade of the Elbe was known, and to hasten your departure as much as possible.

"I am, &c.

THE MORALIST.

The Essays which may be attempted, under this head, in the Alexandria Advertiser, we have endeavored to adapt to the taste of such of our readers as have already requested a little gravity, by way of relief to political subjects. We are further led to this subject from a wish, for a while, to thus employ the room generally filled with lighter articles—this reason will to others, of our readers, appear obvious. We hope for assistance; and in order to anticipate the garbling of the critic we acknowledge and trust that the subject will warrant our borrowing a little, occasionally, from writers on morality and natural philosophy.

"Be virtuous ends pursued by virtuous means,

"Nor think th' intention sanctified the deed."

Noble deeds always spring from a noble spirit. Dignity of mind aim at dignity in action—the greatest of both is to intend good, and to do good—to love virture and to practise it. These are truly noble attributes.

Men worship God because they conceive he is good—'tis goodness then that men adore, and, therefore, goodness to men is holiness; the beginning of it is to intend and endeavour to do well, and if good ends be proposed, good effects will be produced. If we cannot make all mankind honest and virtuous, let us make as many as we can, and begin with ourselves.—This is setting out with our face towards peace and happiness. By contemplating the nature of morality, which includes all virtue in heart and life, we shall better know and esteem it.

He who desires no virtue in his companion, has no virtue in himself. Hence, when the wealthy and the dissolute connect themselves with indigent companions, for their powers of entertainment, their friendship amounts to little more than paying the reckoning for them.—They only desire to drink and laugh; their fondness is without benevolence, and their familiarity without friendship.

He that would govern his actions by the laws of virtue, must regulate his thoughts by the laws of reason; he must keep guilt from the recesses of his heart, and remember that the pleasures of fancy and the emotion of desire, are more dangerous as they are more hidden, since they escape the awe of observation, and operate equally in every situation, without the concurrence of external opportunites.

He that tries to recommend and defend virtue, can never enter into a better cause. Let the motives to hate vice and love virtue, be the consideration of such effects as are necessarily connected with their nature, such as they produce internally on our minds, and externally in our worldly affairs.

Morality has its root in the heart, and its fruit in actions; it includes the science of good policy—the art of governing nations, societies, families, and each individual government of himself.

This subject is, therefore, of the most extensive and important nature. It leads us to contemplate and understand the nature of man—to learn and practise a life of rectitude—to be devout in all Christian exercises.

Dr. Aikin in his historical account of the invasion of Egypt gives us the following paragraph respecting the commencement of that invasion. In Egypt "The Beys were but indifferent subjects, and the actual possession of Egypt by the Porte little more than nominal: on this foundation it is said to have been proposed to negociate for an admission, more or less unqualified, of the power of France into that country, where, in military and civil authority, it should take the place of the Beys; while, like these but more faithfully, it should render the stipulated tribute, and acknowledge the supremacy of the Mufti, and the sovereignty of the Sultan. In this broad proposition several modifications might be introduced, and perhaps were intended to exist from the first; but something more plausibel, more really consonant with the interests of the Porte must surely have been designed: or the expectation of acquiescence must have been grounded upon an idea of its moral, or at least physical imbecility: it could never be thought that the Sultin could rely upon the continuance of tribute from a power supirior to himself, or that he could think France a better neighbour than the Beys; and arguments might easily have been brought forward more respectful to his understanding. A further consideration of these arguments is impracticable within the limits of the present sketch; but of whatever nature they were, it has been rumoured that they were agreeable to a party in the divan, which, rather than the Sultan, governs the Ottoman Empire, and the conduct of that government in the actual event of the invasion, accorded, it will be found, with this supposition. In Egypt it was intended to represent the arrival of the French army as a transaction equally favorable to the interests of the Soltan and its inhabitants, and hostile only to the Beys: the Beys, rebellious to the one and oppressive to the other.

"The command was given to General Bonaparte. In Bonaparte the republic had a citizen whose character the soldier formed but an ingredient. He was hitherto publicly known for little besides military capacity, or perhaps good fortune. His enemies proud of fighting with pigmies spoke of him with contempt. He was however a lover of the arts, a scholar and a statesman. Possessed of ascendency over those whom he was concerned, he had at his disposal the arrangements of this expedition; and he went out from France rather a sovereign than a general. The colour of his mind was reflected in the whole armament. Learning and science were plagued with urms. He regarded that of the bayonet as the worst and least of conquests. It was only by spreading civilization, and assimilating manners, that he hoped to retain Egypt; and, preparing to put in practice all that theory could suggest for this purpose, he invited men of knowledge and genius in every pursuit to be his companions. Sensible, also of the valuable discoveries to be made in Egypt, he prepared in like manner to bring back those to Europe.

"The military force, when the several detachments were united, consisted of nearly forty thousand men, and the list of artists, men of letters, and those of science, contains the following numbers and departments: in geometry 8, astronomy 4, in general mechanics 14 in watch-making 2, in chemistry 8, in mineralogy 5, in botany 3, in zoology 5, in surgery 6, in pharmacy 3, in antriquities 2, in architecture 4, in drawing 5, in engineering 19, in geography 18, in printing 15. In conformity with the various objects attending in this assemblage of persons, the implments of war were accompanied with those of science.

"Though nothing could be more public than the collecting this armiment, its destination was kept a profound secret."

A singular instance of salubrity of climate.

The Parish of Presteign, in Radnorshire, in Wales, embraces a circle of nineteen miles. The burials on an average of seven years, are only twenty six persons a year; and that of births for the same time forty two. And of the burials upwards of eighteen of the twenty six were of persons from eighty to one hundred years old. It would not be amiss if all Jacobins, Deists, and Atheists would go there. They might gain time to mend and repent, or at least bilk their old father CLOVENROOT of so many year's possession of them. Courier.

A MEDICINE extremely useful when Jaundicy and Billious Complaints are so prevalent among the citizens of America and the West Indies.—They are a useful and efficacious Medicine for curing Jaundicy and Billious disorders, and removing that sinking, faint, distressed feeling at the stomach, difficulty of breathing, loss of appetite, and sleepy, dull heaviness in the forepart of the day, weakness and trembling of the limbs dizziness of the head, and yellowness of countenance, complaints so common to jaundicy and billious people.

Also removing constipation of the bowels, obstructions of urine, cholicy complaints, pukings and purgings, indigestion, sick head ache, rheumatic complaints, &c. (which arise from a collection of sour, billious matter in the stomach) and at length restoring the constitution to strength and vigor.

They are also found very useful to carry off worms, and cure ricketty children, and may be used with safety in all constitutions, ages and sexes.
